Why Grow Native Plants?

We can conserve water, which means there's more water available in our streams and rivers for important ocean fish species, such as Steelhead Trout and Chinook and Coho Salmon.

We can reduce or eliminate our use of toxic pesticides and keep them out of our local creeks, watershed, and ocean.

We can attract birds and beneficial insects that help control mosquitoes or the "bad" bugs in our vegetable and flower gardens.

We can support our local ecosystems by providing important bridges for wildlife between the remaining undeveloped areas near where we live.
